
The grand transition towards green pathways for chemical production, alongside ambitious climate policies, could achieve a 90% reduction in climate change impacts by 2050, while fossil routes offer reductions of 10% in the best case.